Representative Matters

Successfully obtained summary judgment in Sussex County, New Jersey in favor of a university in a case where the client had a $250,000 reserve to settle the matter. Plaintiff, an employee for a third party vendor, alleged that she slipped and fell on snow and ice on the university's campus. Stephen successfully argued that the university had immunity and in the alternative, did not owe Plaintiff a duty because it was not responsible for snow and ice removal on the premises despite the fact that Plaintiff's incident occurred on the university's campus.

Successfully obtained dismissal in Burlington County, New Jersey on behalf of a major retailer in a case where an off the clock employee alleged that she slipped and fell on snow and ice in the store's parking lot. Stephen successfully argued that the matter should be dismissed pursuant to workers' compensation immunity despite the fact that the employee was not working at the time of the incident.

Successfully obtained summary judgment in Philadelphia County on behalf of a property manager and building owner of a residential and commercial building in a case where Plaintiff alleged to have slipped and fell on a liquid substance while walking up the steps to the premises. Stephen successfully argued that his clients did not have notice of the alleged dangerous condition despite the fact that his clients maintained and controlled the premises.

Successfully obtained summary judgment in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania on behalf of a construction company in a subrogation matter. An employee of the Co-Defendant, security company, was patrolling the construction site when he crashed into a neighboring row home. The vehicle's gas tank exploded and numerous homes sustained significant damage from the subsequent fire. Stephen successfully argued that the construction company did not negligently entrust the vehicle to the driver despite that fact the driver was unlicensed and the keys to the vehicle were kept on the construction site.

Successfully obtained dismissal in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania on behalf of a security company in a case where Plaintiff alleged that he sustained serious and permanent injuries when he was detained by security after he was wrongfully alleged to have stolen another individual's property entering a courthouse. Stephen successfully argued that the statute of limitations expired despite the fact that Plaintiff did not have knowledge the security guards who caused him injury were not employees of the courthouse until after the statute expired.

Stephen has obtained numerous defense verdicts and favorable results on behalf of self-insured entities, commercially insured entities and personal insureds at trial, arbitration, mediation and binding ADR.
